Hot Weather Goods

HOT days—scorchers—are coming despite the fact we've had such a cool Spring. Are you prepared with the thinnest, coolest, clothing made for just such weather? We keep always abreast of the needs, present and coming, of our customers, and so have on hand a full stock of all such seasonable goods. There's no "June drop" in Fogel & Burstan's business. We wish to be, and we are, busy every month in the year. So we shall have all through the so-called "dull summer months," a full assortment of all these light Summer goods to supply your demands and meet your convenience in every respect.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR

The response to our White Goods Sale has been so prompt and hearty—indeed, so continuous—that we feel we owe it to our patrons to call their attention to a further stock of Muslin Underwear which, we are happy to inform them, can be offered at Bargain prices so inviting that the goods just sell themselves rather faster than we can get them—in fact it keeps us hustling to be supplied with them! Do you wonder, 39c Muslin Nightgowns 3 for $1.00! Other Muslin Garments from 50c to $2.00—worth nearly double. Under-skirts 50c to $3.00. Princess Slips 98c to $3.50. Corset Covers 25c to 50c. Drawers 25c to $1.00, Combinations 50c to $1.50.

Ladies and Misses Dresses

Our Spring trade in our Suit and Dress Department has been this year unprecedentedly large and successful. We have sold many such suits to the most fastidious ladies in Middletown and vicinity, and they have repeatedly volunteered an expression of their gratified surprise that ready-made suits of such fine fabrics, and so well and stylishly made, and above all, at prices so low, could be bought right here at home—a thing they had never known before! This is very pleasant to hear, and it is just the thing we are striving for as a firm—namely, to convince our valued customers that in quality, style and price, we can more than compete with the best city stores whose expenses are vastly greater than ours.

Linen Suits $2.98 to $8.00
Linen Dresses $2.50 to $6.00
Embroidered Dresses $2.50 to $12.00
Lingerie Dresses $3.50 to $12.00
Linene and Linen Dusters $2.50 to $6.50
Lawn and Gingham Dresses 98c to $5.00

Our Millinery Department

Though our Spring Season is near its close, we still have on hand a good selection of SUMMER HATS of the various styles and shapes, to close out which we are making the big reduction of 32½ per cent. thus giving you the benefit in price, and ourselves the benefit of more room for the Fall and Winter stock we are already beginning to lay in, in order to get the low prices given by the makers to the early buyer. This is another reason why we can afford to make this big cut in prices. But we advise you to act quickly.

If You Were an Expert, What Car Would You Buy?

The time has passed when automobiles can be sold to you on their appearances or claims. This is a day when you and every purchaser must be shown what the car for which you pay your money will actually perform; what it will do. Beware of an automobile salesman who attempts to beguile you with a pleasing story. Tell him to show the goods and prove to you that his cars are worth the money. Find out whether his car is a real car or only an assembled automobile built to sell.

You have a right to your money's worth, but it is up to you to see that you get it. Deeper than all appearances, there are a few expert tests which ought to be applied to every car.

Who makes the car? Is it an assembled car or made from top to bottom by one manufacturer? What kind of a guarantee is on it? Does the manufacturer respect his own product with a real guarantee, or does he want you to take the chance? What do parts cost you and how conveniently can you get them? How many cars of this make are in service and how many are giving satisfaction? Questions like these go deep into the heart of the case, and if you put them rigorously upon any car you will find out with a certainty whether or not that car is worth its price.

We are selling Studebaker E-M-F "30" and Flanders "20" cars because we know that, dollar for dollar, their equal is not sold in the market today. The records of many thousands of cars in all kinds of service have convinced us absolutely. Studebaker E-M-F "30" and Flanders "20" cars are built to run, and because they run they sell. If we cannot prove to you under the most searching test that Studebaker cars are absolutely the best automobile values in the market, we do not want your business; but we can prove it, and your neighbors who drive these cars will tell you the same thing.

Be an expert when it comes to buying a car. You can, by getting from us some further ideas on real tests of an automobile. Clip the attached coupon and send it to us now because we have something new to tell you which you ought to know, whatever car you have in mind.

We have purchasers ready to buy farms in Delaware and we are seeking live men in all sections of the state to show and sell property; an opportunity to men able to furnish best of references. Address National Farm & Home Seekers' Information Bureau, Inc., Quakertown, Pa.

A little social party was given Miss Elsie Byron at her home on North Broad street Thursday evening, by a few of her friends. The evening was pleasantly spent in vocal and instrumental music, after which the guests were invited to the dining room where refreshments consisting of olives, pickles, cakes, grape juice, minis, etc., were served.

"Kill the fly" is the battery of those who intend to wage a deadly campaign against the germ-bearing insect. The common little house fly will no longer be allowed to enjoy the privilege of entering the sugar bowl, helping himself, and then finishing his repast by a bath in the milk picher. The crusade is on and an active fight should greatly reduce the number of the little pests.

A GANG OF ROBBERS

Being Broken Up by Railroad Detectives

Railroad officer John Armstrong is doing good work for the company at this time and elsewhere on the line. He is strictly attentive to his duties, always sober, and has both good judgment and courage, and is making altogether a very fine record. He lives here in Middletown and has an interesting little family.

On Friday evening last, just as John Bennett, otherwise known as "Two Sticks" from the fact that he is lame and uses two crutches was boarding the 7:30 passenger train South officer Armstrong arrested him on the charge of breaking in to and robbing a car in Kent County, and took him to Dover where he was given a hearing before Squire Wood who held him to bail in $1,000 to answer to the charge also of receiving stolen goods, and in default of bail, sent him to the work-house to await trial. Bennett plays the role of "fence" at Harrington for a gang of half dozen or so of robbers who have been operating extensively in this and in other state. Five of this gang have been caught so far.

John Bloxon, the one-legged colored man who was arrested last summer for being a notorious colored man because of his "boozing whiskey," was arrested for breaking into a car at Clayton, and was traced by the officers for over six miles by the prints of his wooden stump before he was caught, a few days since.

A big lot of the stolen goods accumulated by this gang, have been recovered—some of it found in cellars and garrets of houses in Wilmington and other places, and an 80 pound electric motor was unearthed from a marsh about a mile below New Castle.

Detective Armstrong has done excellent service in helping break up this dangerous gang that has been operating on a wholesale scale in many states.

AN OPERATION ON A LAD

On Monday afternoon Dr. James A. Draper, of Wilmington, operated on Henry, the little five year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Howell.

Like many other children in our town the lad had suffered from an attack of chicken-pox, and one or two pustules developed into something like an abscess which failed to yield to the usual treatment and operative interference was decided upon.

Owing to the youth of the patient and to a rather weak heart, anesthetic could not be used not even locally, and during the painful operation it required two men to hold the little sufferer's limbs.

The drainage tubes were removed on Friday by Dr. E. G. Clark, and he believes the wound is healing in a healthy manner and that the lad will recover. Much sympathy is felt by the whole community both for the little lad and for his parents. THE TRANSCRIPT hopes the case may have a happy issue in his entire recovery.

A Linen Shower

Miss Bettle Elison, of Mt. Pleasant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Elison was tendered a "Linen Shower" surprise on Tuesday evening, in view of her marriage which will take place in the early fall.

The affair was given at "Weston" the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Brady, near Mt. Pleasant. The house was beautifully decorated with pink peonies and a charming evening spent. Miss Kennerly of Harrington, Mr. and Mrs. Sewell Downs, of Mt. Pleasant entertained the guests with music. The visiting list sang old plantation songs.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Elison, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Elison, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Warren, Mr. William Morgan, Mr. David W. Colpitts, Mr. and Mrs. Sewell Downs, Mrs. James Elison, Miss Blanche Elison, of Mt. Pleasant; Mrs. Boyd McCoy of Kirkwood; Miss Eugenia Beaton and Mrs. Henry M. Schroeder of Middletown.

'Their 33d Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Elison celebrated the 33rd anniversary of their marriage on Tuesday, by giving a dinner to the members of their family. Each anniversary during the thirty-three years has been observed in like manner. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Elison, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Elison, Miss Blanche Elison, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Elison, Miss Lydia Elison, Mr. J. Moody Roth, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Elison, H. H. Houtson, Miss Myrtle Houtson, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Clayton, Miss Elizabeth Clayton, Miss Mary Beaton of Middletown; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Elison and family, Mr. and Mrs. James Elison and son James of New Castle; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Janvier Woods of McDonough.

Attacked The Officer

Saturday afternoon while a tall white man was acting in a noisy and disorderly manner in the waiting room at the depot, officer Armstrong approached him and told him to be quiet. This only made the drunken man more insolent and he threatened Mr. Armstrong's authority. When the latter showed his badge, the fellow tried to tear it off the officer's coat, getting his knuckles severely rapped for his pains. Officer Lee Cochran was summoned by Mr. Armstrong, and the man was lodged in the cooler.

On Sunday morning he had his hearing before Squire Wood who fined him $3 with $2 costs, for being drunk and disorderly. He gave him as Henry Eitel, from Harrington.

DEATH OF W. PEARCEN BIGGS

A Well-known Citizen Long Prominent in Public Affairs

The many friends of Mr. William Percen Biggs, heard with much regret of his death on Saturday evening last, at 8:30 o'clock in his home on Cass Street. Although Mr. Biggs had been ill for several months and his condition had been for some days much weaker, still his death came as a great shock to the community where he was so well known during his long residence.

Mr. Biggs was a son of John and Diana Bell Biggs, and was born on the Biggs homestead in Pencader hundred, January 22, 1838. His father was a native of Cecil county, Md., where he was born October 12th, 1786. While a young man John Biggs removed to Pencader hundred and became a large land owner. He had 10 children, eight sons and two daughters, William Percen being the ninth child.

William P. Biggs received his early education in the public schools of Pencader, and afterwards attended the New Jersey Academy at Pennington, N. J. After remaining upon his father's home place, Locust Grove, until he was of age, he thereafter farmed the land on his own account.

In 1870 he bought the McCracken farm of 216 acres, upon which he was engaged in farming for 10 years, raising grain and peaches, and was unusually successful therein.

Mr. Biggs was all his life a Democrat, actively participating in the political struggles of his time. He was twice elected a Representative to the State Legislature in 1875 and 1889. In 1890 his brother, Governor Benjamin T. Biggs, appointed him clerk of the peace for New Castle county, and he held that office for five years. In 1880 he gave up active farming and removed with his family to Middletown, where he built a handsome brick residence. He was a member of Union Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M., of Middletown.

Mr. Biggs was married in Pencader hundred, January 17th, 1855, to Fannie, daughter of James and Clara C. Pierce. They had four children, three sons and one daughter. The first son, William Percen, who died young, Nellie, who died at the age of 11, and Clara M., wife of Mr. George Janvier, teller in the Citizens' National Bank of Middletown. He also survived by his widow.

The funeral services were under the charge of Rev. Vaughan S. Collins pastor of Bethesda M. E. Church of which the deceased was a member.

The exercises opened with the reading by Rev. Collins of the 90th Psalm and part of the 15th chapter of 1st Cor.

Then a quartette composed of Mrs. J. C. Alston, Mrs. Samuel Price, and Messrs. Howard A. and Clarence E. Pool sang "Rock of Ages," and Rev. F. H. Moore, D. D., prayed. The quartet next sang "Nearer My God to Thee" and Rev. L. W. Layfield, of Elkton, made the principal address which was largely reminiscent of the days long ago when, during his pastorate at Bethel Church, the deceased was a leading and very active member.

Rev. Collins also made some remarks of a eulogistic character upon the deceased. The Rev. W. H. Hutchins was also present together with a large number of people from home and abroad.

The ceremonies ended with a second prayer by Mr. Collins.

There were many beautiful flower emblems from friends, some of them being elaborate designs of the finest roses, pinks and lilies.

The remains were followed to the place of interment, Bethel cemetery, by many carriages, and the usual ceremonies were observed at the grave.

A SAD DEATH

Saturday last at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, Miss Annie Shallos died at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. William F. Shallos near Morphy's, ill after a long and painful illness. It was a death for the young woman had just passed her 21st birthday last April, and her untimely loss is deeply lamented by her own loved ones and by her many friends.

At 3:30 P. M. on Wednesday, the funeral ceremonies were observed at her parents home, the Rev. Percy L. Donaghy, rector of St. Anne's being in charge of them. There were many lovely floral emblems brought by relatives and friends, and laid about the fair young girl's bier.

The pall-bearers were Messrs James T. Shallos, Eugene Shallos, Ralph Shallos, Elias M. Shallos, Edwin E. Shallos, and William Reynolds, of Akron, Ohio.

The funeral was rather of a private character, those present being relatives or immediate friends of the family. From a distance there were Mr. and Mrs. Wyan Williams, and Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Williams, of Philadelphia and Charles Snyder and others from Wilmington. Interment was made in O. S. Anne's Cemetery.

Funeral of Elijah W. Culver

On Friday the relatives of Mr. Elijah W. Culver, who lost his life so sadly a few days ago came to Middletown, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Culver, of Chapel, Md.; Mr. Norman Culver, of Richmond, Va.; and two sons and all of them accompanied by Mr. Elijah W. Culver, Miss Mary Culver, and his other son Mr. Harry Culver, who arrived by train on Saturday and remained to stay on Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Culver.

The mystery surrounding his sudden and mournful death is not yet and probably never will be certainly solved, though it is now known that a freight train went North on the South bound track at the same time the Norfolk Express left Middletown at 3:13 on the morning he met his death. It is probable that Mr. Culver was not aware of this train running North on the South track, and in consequence somehow got caught while attempting to recross the track. He thus fell a martyr to his dangerous duty.

A Fine Sermon on Ruth

On Sunday evening in the Forest Presbyterian Church, Rev. Charles E. Erdman, D. D., who delivered the morning sermon before the large audience in the Old Drawers Church, preached a very fine sermon before a good congregation, composed in part of members from all the churches in town. The learned speaker took for his subject the Story of Ruth, a romance in which God was working out the salvation of the world, a prophecy of salvation.

"God's hand is seen in all the happenings of life, and viewed from the vantage ground of eternity, every human life will be shown to be a romance though never so filled with sorrow and misfortune."

The reverend gentleman's treatment of his theme was at once scholarly and spiritual, and to hear it was indeed a rare treat.

Town Tax Rate $1.00

At a meeting of the Town Board on Wednesday evening, the tax rate for the year 1912 was fixed at $1.00 on the 100 assessment. The rate is the same as last year, when it was reduced from $1.25.

OLD DRAWERS ANNIVERSARY

The seventeenth annual reunion of the Friends of Old Drawers at the historic edifice on the "Apocynimy," known as Old Drawers Church, last Sunday was an event of unusual interest which attracted an attendance numbering between 700 and 800. The plentiful rain had made a fine green sward, which was carefully shorn, while the whole grounds were fastidiously neat and clean, and the venerable old church itself, nicely painted and repaired and fairly embowered in climbing ivy, its white shutters contrasting with the emerald hue, never looked more noble. Within, it was prettily dressed in wild flowers, ferns and plants. Just behind the old fashioned high pulpit, with its sounding board above, surrounded by a gilded dove, is a square window, the embrasure of which was filled with flowers, while on either side of the pulpit, on the window sills, and in front of it, were large bouquets of snow laurel blooms and daisies—all brought from the adjacent woods and fields.

The exercises of the morning were under charge of Rev. Edward A. McLaury, pastor of the Drawers Presbyterian Church in Odessa. Rev. Francis H. Moore, D. D., pastor of Forest Presbyterian Church in Middletown, read the 131st Psalm. Rev. J. L. Sparklin, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church in Odessa, offered prayer. An offering for the benefit of the Society was taken and Mrs. Warden Humphrey of Wilmington sang a solo very beautifully.

Dr. Moore then introduced Rev. C. E. Erdman D. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary, as the speaker of the morning, and he announced as his text the fourth chapter of John the 36th verse: "Other men have labored, and ye are entered into their labors." "We are grateful to the fathers who built their characters into the walls of this building as they also did into the fabric of society, of the state and of the government. The speaker proceeded to show that the fathers had three great characteristics: First, they believed in the unseen God as an actual reality, possessed above all things with a sovereignty that entered not only into the government of the whole natural world, but also into the details of the lives of His creature; second, that the fathers were men who believed in law, but also lived liberty; and thirdly, that they believed in the Bible as the Word of God though claiming the right of a free interpretation of its meaning by the light of reason.

During the noon hour a business meeting of the Friends of Old Drawers was held and the following officers were again chosen: President, Daniel W. Corbit of Odessa; vice-president, John V. Craven, of West Chester, Pa.; treasurer, George Janvier, of Middletown; secretary, Miss Cornelia Bowman, of Wilmington; trustees, Thomas J. Craven of Salem, N. J., Alfred S. Elliott of Wilmington, in the place of Herbert H. Boyd of Philadelphia, deceased; Miss Dorothy Vandegrift of Wilmington, Clarence E. Pool, Howard A. Pool, Janvier Woods and William Janvier of McDonough, and Dr. Walter V. Woods of Odessa.

During the noon intermission the various parties, some at tables, others in their autos or on the ground, partook of their luncheon and had pleasing social converse.

At 3:30 o'clock, the afternoon exercises opened with singing "My Faith Looks Up to Thee." Rev. Mr. Loderbush read the fifth chapter of Ephesians, and Mrs. Humphrey sang a solo, "I'm a Pilgrim." Daniel W. Corbit, as president of the society, made the report of its affairs on this the 204th anniversary of Old Drawers and the 17th of the annual reunion of the society. He then introduced as the orator for the afternoon, Josiah Marvel of Wilmington, who addressed the well filled house, after Mrs. Humphrey had sung another solo, "I Know Not Where."

Mr. Marvel gave his audience the novel treat of picturing for them the scenes that marked the opening service in 1773, in the newly built Drawers Church. He gave a lively review of the people, their dress, modes of travel, alone or in pillbox, or on horseback, single or in pillbox, that was both entertaining and humorous. The address concluded with a brief commendation of the labors of the society in preserving Old Drawers. The choir and congregation sang "America." The total offerings were $152.

The choir at both services consisted of Mrs. Warden, of Wil.ington, Mrs. George Whitlock, and Miss Helen Watkins of Odessa, and Messrs. Clarence E. Pool, Howard A. Pool, and Frank R. Pool of McDonough, while John W. Watkins of Odessa played the cornet and Mrs. William R. Davis, of Odessa acted as organist.

A number of improvements in the grounds were made this year, tree planting, and a new automobile road graded. With a legacy of $1,000 as a nucleus, the trustees started an endowment fund which is hoped to make large enough in time to maintain the edifice and the surrounding grounds.

They both wish to be kindly remembered to all their friends and acquaintances of old in lay gists.

Mr. Lockwood also visited Mrs. Wright's daughter, Mrs. Jennie Pepper who lives in Maryland, and the wife of Dr. John Pepper who has been quite successful as a surgeon.

They have one daughter a blooming young lady.

"Standing with reluctant feet Where the brook and river meet," Womanhood and childhood fleet, Mrs. Pepper, and Miss Helen Watkins, were both present.

CHILDREN'S DAY

Bethesda Sunday School Present A Fine Program

Children's Day services were held last Sunday evening in the auditorium of the Bethesda M. E. Church before a fine audience.

The exercises began with a marching song sung by the children of the Primary Department as they entered the room. This was followed by a solo by Miss Marian Vinyard, "Pretty Flowers Arise," in which the whole school joined.

After a bright introductory speech by June McWhorter, 11th Margaret Brady, and Helen Kates spoke nicely, "Like The Birdies," and the infant class sang "Jeans Loves Me," followed with a quilter, Parker Schuman, Edwin Carter, William Pinder

CHAPTER XXII.

The Last Resort of Kings and Men.

The sudden entrance upon a quarrel between others is invariably at a disadvantage. Usually he is unaware of the cause of difference and generally he has no idea of the stage of development of the affair that has been reached. Newbold suffered from this lack of knowledge and to these disadvantages were added others. For instance, he had not the faintest idea as to who or what was the stranger. The room was not very light in the day time. Armstrong happened to be standing with his back to it at some distance from the window by the side of which Enid stood. Six years naturally and inevitably make some difference in a man's appearance, and it is not to be wondered that at first Newbold did not recognize the man before him as the original of the face in his wife's locket, although he had studied that face over and over again.

Nearer scrutiny, a longer study, would have enlightened him of course, but for the present he saw nothing but a stranger visibly perturbed on one side and the woman he loved apparently fiercely resentful, stormily indignant, confronting the other with an upraised hand.

The man, whoever he was, had affronted her, had aroused her indignation, perhaps had insulted her, that was plain. He went swiftly to her side, he interposed himself between her and the man.

"Enid," he asked, and his easy use of the name was a revelation and an illumination to Armstrong, "who is this man, what has he done?"

It was Armstrong who replied. "If Newbold were in the dark, not so he; although they had never spoken, he had seen Newbold. He recognized him instantly, indeed, recognized or not, the newcomer could be no other than he."

"You Coward!" She Cried.

There was doubtless no other man in the mountains. He had expected to find him when he approached the hut and was ready for him.

To the fire of his ancient hatred and jealousy was added the new fuel that increased his heat and flame. This man had come between Armstrong and the woman he loved before and had got away unscathed; evidently he had come between him and this new woman he loved. Well, he should be made to suffer for it this time and by Armstrong's hands.

The instant Newbold had entered the room Armstrong had thrust to leap upon him, and he meant to do it. One or the other of them, he swore in his heart, should never leave that room alive.

But Newbold should have his chance. Armstrong was as brave, as fearless, as intrepid, as any man on earth.

There was much that was admirable in his character; he would not take any man at a disadvantage in an encounter such as he proposed. He would not hesitate to rob a man of his wife if he could, and he would not shrink from any deed necessary to gain his purpose with a woman, for good or evil, but he had his own ideas of honor, he would not shoot an enemy in the back for instance.

Singular perversion, this, to which some minds are liable! To take from a man his wife by subtle and underhand methods, to rob him of that which makes life dear and sweet—there was nothing dishonorable in that! But to take his life, a thing infinitely less moment, by the same process—that was not to be thought of. In Armstrong's code it was right, it was imperative, to confront a man with the truth and take the consequences; but to confront a woman with a lie and take her body and soul, if so he might be gained, was equally inadmissible. And there are other souls than Armstrong's in which this moral inconsistency and obliquity about men and women has lodgment!

Armstrong confronted Newbold therefore, lustful of battles; he yearned to leap upon him, his fingers itched as he grasped him, then trembled slightly as he rubbed them nervously against his thumbs; his face protruded a little, his eyes narrowed.

"My name is Armstrong," he said, determined to precipitate the issue without further delay and flinging the words at the other in a tone of heeding defiance which, however strange to say, did not seem to effect Newbold in any perceptible degree.

The name was an illumination to him, though not at all in the way the speaker had fancied; the recollection of it was the only one concerning her that rankled in the solitary mind. He had often wanted to ask Enid Maitland what she had meant by that chance allusion to Armstrong which she had made in the beginning of their acquaintance, but he had refrained.

At first he had no right to question her; there could be no natural end to their affections; and latterly when their hearts had been disclosed to each other in the wild, tempestuous, passionate scenes of the last two or three days, he had had things of greater moment to engage his attention, subjects of more importance to discuss with her.

He had for the time being forgotten Armstrong and he had not before known what jealousy was until he had entered that room. To have seen her with any man would have given him acute pain, perhaps just because he had been so long withdrawn from human society, but to see her with this man who flashed instantly into his recollection upon the utterance of his name was an added exasperation.

Newbold turned to the woman to whom indeed he had addressed his question in the first place, and there was something in his movement which bespoke a gallant almost contemptuous obliviousness to the presence of the other man which was indeed hard for him to bear.

Hate begets hate. He was quite conscious of Armstrong's antagonism, which was entirely undisguised and which was growing greater with every passing moment. The score against Newbold was running up in the mind of his visitor.

"Ah," coolly said the owner of the cabin to the first of his two guests, "I do remember you did mention that name the first day you spent here. Is he a friend of yours?"

"Not now," answered Enid Maitland. She too was in a strange state of perturbation on account of the dilemma in which she found herself involved. She was determined not to betray the unconscious confidence of the dead. She hoped fervently that Newbold would not recognize Armstrong as the man of the locket, but if he did she was resolved that he should not also be recognized as the man of the letters, at least not by her act.

Newbold was ignorant of the existence of those letters and she did not intend that he should be enlightened so far as she could prevent it. But she was keen enough to see that the first recognition would be inevitable; she even admitted the fact that Armstrong would probably precipitate it himself. Well, no human soul, not even their writer, knew that she had destroyed them, she had determined to do so at the first convenient opportunity. Before that, however, she intended to show them not to Newbold but to Armstrong, to disclose his perfidy, to convict him of the falsehood he had told her and to justify herself even in his eyes for the action she had taken.

Mingled with all these quick reflections was a deadly fear. She was quick to perceive the hatred Armstrong bore on the one hand because of the old love affair, the long cherished grudge breaking into sudden life; on the other she realized that her own failure to come to Armstrong's hands and her love for Newbold, which she neither could nor had any desire to conceal, and the cumulative of these passionate antagonisms would only make him the more desperate.

Whether Newbold found out Armstrong's connection with his past love, there was sufficient provocation in the present to evoke all the oppugnancy and resentment of his nature. Enid felt as she might if the punches of the floor had been sticks of dynamite with active ends, and in every feel that pressed them; as if the slightest movement on the part of any one would bring about an explosion.

The tenseness of the situation was bewildering to her. It had come upon her with such startling force; the unexpected arrival of Armstrong, of all the men on earth the one who ought not to be there, and then the equally startling arrival of Newbold, of whom perhaps the same might have been said. If Newbold had only gone on, if he had not come back, if he had been rescued by her uncle or old Kirkby—But "ifs" were idle, she had to face the present situation to which she was utterly unequal.

She had entirely repudiated Armstrong, that was one sure point; she knew how guilty he had been toward Newbold's wife, that was another; she realized how he had deceived her, that was the third. These eliminated the man from her affections, but it is one thing to thrust a man out of your heart and another to thrust him out of your life; he was still there, and by no means the sport of blind fate Armstrong intended to have something to say as to the course of events, to use his own powers to determine the issue.

Of but one thing beside her hatred for Armstrong was Enid Maitland absolutely certain; she would never disclose to the man she loved the fact that the woman, the memory of whose supposed passion he cherished, had been unfaithful to him in heart if not in deed. Nothing could wrest that secret from her. She had been told by Newbold's quixotic ideas, the contagion of his perversion of common sense had fastened itself upon her. She would not have been human either if she had not experienced a thrill of pride and joy at the possibility that in some way, of which she yet knew nothing, she was the instrument blind or otherwise, the facts might be disclosed which would enable Newbold to claim her openly and honorably, without hesitation before or remorse after, as his wife. This fascinating flash of expectation, hopeful feeling she thought unworthy of her and strove to fight it down, but with manifest impossibility.

It has taken time to set these things down; to speak or to write is a slow process, and the ratio between outward expressions and inward is as great as that between light and sound. Questions and answers between the three followed as swiftly as thrust and parry between accomplished swordsmen, and yet between each demand and reply she had time to entertain these swift thoughts—as the drowning compass light experiences in seconds!

"I may not be her friend," said Armstrong steadily, "but she left me in these mountains a month ago with more than a half way promise to marry me, and I have sought her through the snows to claim the fulfillment."

"You never told me that," exclaimed Newbold sternly and again addressing the woman rather than the man.

"There was nothing to tell," she answered quickly. "I was a young girl, heart free; I liked this man, perhaps because he was so different from those to whom I had been accustomed, and when he pressed his suit upon me, I told him the truth. I did not love him, I did not know whether I might grow to care for him or not; if I did, I should marry him and if I did not, no power on earth could make me. And now—I hate him!" She flung the words at him savagely.

Armstrong was beside himself with fury at her words, and Newbold's cool indifference to him personally was unendurable. In battle such as he waged he had the mistaken notion that anything was fair. He could not really tell whether it was love of woman or hate of man that was most dominant; he saw at once the state of affairs between the two. He could hurt the man and the woman with one statement; what might be its ulterior effect he did not stop to consider, perhaps if he had he would not have cared greatly. He realized anyway that since Newbold's arrival his chance with Enid was gone; perhaps whether Newbold were alive or dead it was gone forever; although Armstrong did not think that, he was not capable of thinking very far into the future in his then condition, the present bulked too large for that.

"I did not think after that kiss in the road that you would go back on me this way, Enid," he said quickly.

"You coward," repeated she, with one swift venomous glance at the other man, and then she turned to her lover. She laid her hand upon his arm, she lifted her face up to him.

"As God is my judge," she cried, her voice rising with the tragic intensity of the moment and thrilling with indignation, "he took it from me like the thief and the coward he was, and he tells it now like the liar he is. We were riding side by side, I was utterly unprepared, I thought him a gentleman, he caught me and kissed me before I knew it. I drove him from me. That's all."

"I believe you," said Newbold gently, and then for the first time, he addressed himself to Armstrong. "You came doubtless to rescue Miss Maitland, and in so far your purpose was admirable and you deserve thanks and respect, but no further. This is my cabin, your words and your conduct render you unwelcome here. Miss Maitland is under my protection; if you will come outside I will be glad to talk with you further."

"Under your protection?" sneered Armstrong beside himself. "After a month with you alone I take it she needs no further protection."

Newbold did not leap upon the man for that mordant insult to the woman; his approach was slow, relentless, terrible. Eight or ten feet separated them. Armstrong met him half way, his impetuosity was greater, he sprang forward, turned about, faced the full light from the narrow window.

"Well," he cried, "have you got anything to say or do to it?"

But Newbold had stopped, recalled. He stood staring as if petrified; recognition, recognition rushed over him.

Now and at last he knew the man. The face that confronted him was the same face that had stared out at him from the locket he had taken from the bruised breast of his dead wife, which had been a mystery to him for all these years.

"Well," he said, "you are waiting for, are you afraid?"

From Newbold's belt depended a holster and a heavy revolver. As Armstrong made to attack him he flashed it out with astonishing quickness and presented it. The newcomer was unarmed—his Winchester leaned against the wall by his fur coat and he had no pistol.

"If you move a step forward or backward," said Newbold with deadly calm, "I will kill you without mercy."

"So you'd take advantage of a weaponless man, would you?" sneered Armstrong.

"Oh, for God's sake," cried the woman, "don't kill him!"

"You both misjudge me," was the answer. "I shall take no advantage of

"She was beside herself with love for me; an old affair, you know," said Armstrong more explicitly, thinking to use a spear with a double barb to pierce the woman's and the man's heart alike. That he defamed the dead was of no moment then. "She wanted to leave you," he ran on glibly, "She wanted me to take her back and—"

"Untrue," burst forth from Enid Maitland's lips. "A slanderous, dastardly, cowardly untruth."

But the man paid no attention to her in their excitement; perhaps they did not even hear her. Newbold thrust his pistol violently forward.

"Would you murder me as you murdered the woman?" gibed Armstrong in bitter taunt.

Then Enid Maitland found it in her heart to urge Newbold to kill him where he stood, but she had no time if she could have carried out her design, for Newbold flung the weapon from him and the next moment the two men leaped upon each other, straining, struggling, daring, battling like savage beasts, each seeking to clasp his fingers around the throat of the other and then twist and crush until life was gone.

The girl shrank back against the wall and stared frightened. She feared for her lover, she feared for herself. Strange primitive feelings thrrobed in her veins. It was an old situation, when two male animals fought for supremacy and the ownership of a female, whose destiny was entirely removed from her own hands.

Armstrong had shown himself in his true colors at last. She would have nothing to hope from him if he was the victor; and she even wondered in terror what might happen to her if the man she loved triumphed after the passions aroused in such a battle? She grew sick and giddy, her bosom rose and fell, her breath came fast as she followed the panting, struggling, clinging grapple, figures about the room.

At first there had been no advantage to either, but now after five minutes—or was it hours?—of fierce fighting, the strength and superior condition of her lover began to tell. He was forcing the other backward. Slowly, inch by inch, foot by foot, step by step, he mastered him. The two interwining figures broadside to her now, she could see their faces inflamed by the lust of the battle, engorged, blood red with hate and fury, but there was a look of exultation on one and the shadow of approaching disaster on the other. But the consciousness that he was being mastered ever so little only increased Armstrong's determination and he fought back with the frenzy, the strength of a maddened gorilla, and again for a space the issue was in doubt. But not for long.

The table, a heavy cumbersome, four-legged affair, solid almost as a rock, stood in the way. Newbold at last backed Armstrong up against it and by superhuman effort bent him over it, held him with one arm and using the table as a support, wrenched his left hand free, and sunk his fingers around the other's throat. It was all up with Armstrong. It was only a question of time now.

"Now," Newbold guttered out hoarsely, "you slandered the dead woman I married, and you insulted the living one I love. Take back what you said before you die."

"I forgive him," cried Enid Maitland. "Oh, for God's sake don't kill him before my eyes!"

Armstrong was past speech. The inveteracy of his hatred could be seen even in his fast glazing eyes, the indomitableness of his purpose yet spoke in the negative shake of his head. He could die, but he would die in his hate and in his purpose.

Enid ran to the two, she grappled Newbold's arm with both her own and strove with all her might to tear it away from the other's throat. Her lover paid no more attention to her than if a summer breeze had touched him. Armstrong grew black in the face, his limbs relaxed, another second or two it would have been over with him.

Once more the door was thrown open; through it two snow-covered men entered. One swift glance told them all. One of them at least had expected it. On the one side Kirkby, on the other Maitland, tore Newbold away from his prey just in time to save Armstrong's life. Indeed the latter was so far gone that he fell from the table to the floor unconscious, choking, almost dying. It was Enid Maitland who received his head in her arms and helped bring him back to life while the panting Newbold stood staring dully at the woman he loved and the man he hated on the floor at his feet. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

"Your Picture?" He Asked.

this man. I would disdain to do so if it were necessary, but before the last resort I must have speech with him, and this is the only way in which I can keep him quiet for a moment, if as I suspect, his hate measures with mine."

"You have the advantage," protested Armstrong. "Say your say and get it over with. I've waited all these years for a chance to kill you and my patience is exhausted."

Still keeping the other covered, Newbold stepped over to the table pulled out the drawer and drew from it the locket. Enid remembered she had hastily thrust it there when he had handed it to her, and there it had lain unnoted and forgotten. It was quite evident to her what was toward now. Newbold had recognized the other man, explanations were inevitable. With his left hand Newbold sought the catch of the locket and pressed the spring. In two steps he faced Armstrong with the open locket thrust toward him.

"Your picture?" he asked.

"Mine!"

"Do you know the locket?"

"I gave it to a woman named Louise Rosser five or six years ago."

"My wife."

"Yes, she was crazy in love with me, but—"

With diabolic malice Armstrong left the sentence uncompleted. The inference he meant should be drawn from his reticence was obvious.

"I took it from her dead body," gritted out Newbold.
